State Prosecutor JUDr. Josef Urválek is the first to take the floor, presenting the wording of charges. After his introductory sentences, the commentator briefly lists the main charges and then introduces the beginning of the interrogation of Rudolf Slánský. The former General Secretary answers questions from the Presiding Judge JUDr. Jaroslav Novák, whether he feels guilty of crimes, and further testifies to the commencement of his activities in the Communist Party. On the question of the Prosecutor J. Urválek, Slánský testifies on his activities during the First Republic. The Prosecutor then confronts Slánský with police and court documents of the 1920s, which according to him should confirm that already at that time Slánský did not behave as a Communist. Slánský confirms the submitted documents and, at the request of Urválek, elaborates on his “Trotskyist activity” (for example, he mentions cooperation with Evžen Klinger). In this context, the Prosecutor confronts Slánský with his police card (no. 352) of 1928 and the police protocol of 11 October 1927. Slánský identifies the documents and, at the direction of Urválek, clarifies his “opportunistic activity”, for example in the case of the election of Edvard Beneš as President of the Republic, and in the matter of the Czechoslovak-Soviet Treaty. Technical note: Trial, I., Part 1 and 2, Československý státní film [Czechoslovak State Film] stated on the film strip; film is identical with films K35-84 and K35-88.	K35-31

On the question of the Prosecutor J. Urválek, Slánský testifies on deployment of “enemy elements” in the state and economic apparatus. In this context, he mentions these names: Josef Frank, Ludvík Frejka, Otto Fischl, Rudolf Margolius, Evžen Löbl, Eduard Outrata, Josef Goldmann, Karel Šváb, André Simone, Marie Švermová, and others. The Prosecutor confronts Slánský with documents about K. Šváb and J. Frank, which are to prove their criminal behaviour during World War II. Slánský confirms that he knows these documents and was covering the mentioned persons. He also speaks in a similar vein in the case of documents submitted by Urválek, mentioning the names of O. Fischl, A. Simone and O. Šling. According to the title, Rudolf Slánský testifies on “attempts to draw Czechoslovakia into preparation for the Third World War”. In this context, he mentions the activities of Konni Zilliacus, a member of the British Labour Party, and his meeting with Yugoslav politician Moshe Piade. At the request of the Judge, Slánský also testifies on his intentions and methods of his accomplices within the Communist Party. Technical note: Trial, I., Part 3 and 4, Československý státní film [Czechoslovak State Film] stated on the film strip; film is identical with films K35-87 and K35-63.	K35-32

Asked by Prosecutor J. Urválek, Slánský testifies on sabotage of the reconstruction of the Czechoslovak economy and the development of heavy industry. Further questions of the Prosecutor and testimony by Slánský are focused on cooperation with representatives of the “pre-February reaction” (especially with Edvard Beneš), the activities of the “centre” after February 1948 and the strengthening of his own position within the party. The following title “R. Slánský about attempts to seize power in the state through a conspiratorial centre” announces the content of the final part of the film. At the end, the film is complemented by short silent shots of the testifying witness Josef Vondráček. Technical note: Trial, I., Part 5, Československý státní film [Czechoslovak State Film] stated on the film strip; film is identical with film K35-85.

London mainly testifies on his “spy connection” to the American diplomat Noel Field. Another part of his interrogation is focused on activities in the so-called Commission of Three, which should have been a tool for advancing of cadres to middle and lower positions in diplomatic service abroad. In this context, London mentions e.g. Eduard Goldstücker, Karel Dufek, and other diplomats. The news film continues with interrogation of André Simone, the former editor of Rudé právo [Red Justice] daily, before the Chamber of the State Court in Prague on 22 November 1952. Simone testifies on the beginnings of his “Trotskyist” activity in Germany and his acquaintance with the “Trotskyists” Erwin Piscator and Willi Münzenberg. He is then asked by the Prosecutor to explain under what circumstances he was won by French Minister Georges Mandel. Simone also testifies on his contacts with the British Secret Service (in this context, he mentions the name of the Intelligence Service agent Paul Willert). Technical note: Trial, I., Part 3 and 4; film is identical with films K35-66 and K35-67.

London testifies on the deployment of “enemy elements and members of the conspiracy” at Czechoslovak representative offices. The Prosecutor confronts London with the text of a letter of 31 March 1949 addressed Lang, envoy in Switzerland, in which the former Deputy Minister was to recommend Jiří Brotan. Subsequently, London explains the activities of the “centre” after the arrest of Marie Švermová and Karel Šváb. In conclusion, London is asked by the Presiding Judge of the State Court, J. Novák, to explain what he allegedly kept secret at the beginning of the investigation – involvement in the conspiracy. The news film continues with interrogation of André Simone, the former editor of Rudé právo [Red Justice], before the Chamber of the State Court in Prague on the same day. Simone first testifies on the US Bureau of Psychological Warfare, and then explains his post-war arrival in Czechoslovakia with the help of Hubert Ripka, the former Minister of Foreign Trade. In this context, he mentions acquitting Rudolf Slánský. Following further questions from the Presiding Judge and the Prosecutor, André Simone is already dissociating himself from his “Trotskyist” past, mentioning his Jewish origin, subjecting himself to severe self-criticism, and asking to become a warning to others. At the end, the film is complemented by short silent shot of the testifying witness Josef Just. Technical note: Trial, II., Part 6 and 7; film is identical with films K35-69 and K35-65.

Frejka describes the Director General of the Czechoslovak Metal and Machinery Works Fabinger as another “conspirator”. Further, he testifies on various forms of “sabotage” in the field of capital construction; as an example he mentions the construction of a large nitrogen plant in Martinov in the Ostrava region, which had to be stopped and transferred to Lovosice. Frejka also told the Court that the complete renovation and construction of the Stalin plant was not intentionally included in the plan. At the end of the interrogation, the Presiding Judge J. Novák asks the co-defendants whether any of them have a supplementary question to Frejka (Rudolf Slánský rises up). At the end, the film is complemented by short silent shots of the testifying witnesses Ivan Holý, Bedřich Hájek, and Vojtěch Jančík from the following day of the trial (23 November 1952). Technical note: Trial, III., Part 5 and 6; film is identical with films K35-71 and K35-92.

According to the introductory film title, Margolius testifies “on his anti-state conspiratorial activities”. The former Deputy Minister explains the Court espionage cooperation with Western agents and handover of information about the Czechoslovak national economy and foreign trade. In this context, he often mentions the co-defendant Evžen Löbl, with whom he had close contacts, and Straboldi and Brenner as foreign allies of the “centre”. In his testimony, Margolius mentions Otto Wilhelm Winter from Sweden, to whom he was to reveal the state of Czechoslovakia’s negotiations with the Rothschilds regarding the Freja mine, which was owned by the Vítkovice Ironworks. The former Deputy Minister also gives examples of “damaging the Czechoslovak economy” during negotiations with Winter, and therefore Sweden. Slánský comments on the closing speech of the State Prosecutor and his draft sentence, which he considers to be “the most just”. He claims to have the main responsibility for his crimes, but also for the crimes of his co-defendants. The former Secretary General also evaluates his activities in accordance with the charges, he confesses, among other things, to the culpability of Jan Šverma’s death, the plot against President Klement Gottwald’s life, and espionage in favour of “American imperialists”. Slánský also mentions his investigation by security authorities, whose behaviour he considers to be “absolutely correct”. At the end of his speech, he declares that he does not deserve an end other than the one proposed by the Prosecutor. The following are the last words of the defendants Bedřich Geminder and Ludvík Frejka, who, in the same way as Rudolf Slánský, plead guilty and show remorse. Both Frank and Clementis regret their past actions and demand the harshest sentences for themselves. Clementis wishes his case to be a cautionary warning of the endings of a formal, registry membership in the Communist Party associated with volatility, betrayal of allegiance to the Party, and to the Soviet Union. The film continues with final words of Rudolf Margolius, Otto Fischl, Otto Šling, and André Simone before the Chamber of the State Court in Prague on 26 November 1952. All defendants plead guilty of serious crimes and demand the highest and harshest sentences for themselves. Technical note: Trial, IV., Part 16 and 17; film is identical with films K35-51 and K35-56.	K35-43

	Collaboration on the film: P. Freimann, J. Janáček, J. Robek, K. Veselý, J. Franěk, M. Schmiedberger, O. Skalski Film contents: The news film with introductory and closing signature tune and a brief period commentary represents a film montage from the eighth and last day of the trial of the former General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia Rudolf Slánský et al., held from 20 to 27 November 1952 before the Chamber of the State Court in Prague. The camera captured the entry of members of the Chamber to the courtroom in Prague in Pankrác. The Presiding Judge Dr. Jaroslav Novák gives a court verdict against R. Slánský and other defendants. Following the verdict, all defendants step forward before the Court and declare one by one that they accept the sentence and waive their remedies. State Prosecutor J. Urválek reserved the statutory deadline to express his opinion. Subsequently, the Presiding Judge Novák declares the trial closed. The film ends with a period propaganda commentary and a camera shot of the convicts leaving the courtroom. Technical note: Trial, IV., Part 18; film is identical with film K35-55.
